The Freedom from Religion Foundation

The Freedom from Religion Foundation, formed in 1976, is a group that say their focus is on advocating for atheists, agnostics and nontheists. This foundation is especially active in complaining about and sometimes suing schools and municipalities to remove, for example, a poster saying "In God We Trust" or the picture of an American flag with the words "God Bless America." The false claim of the foundation is it is upholding the "separation of church and state."

They are an active group and often threaten small towns over Christmas displays and schools over sacred music in their holiday concerts (both of which are allowed under law and regulations.) The foundation often challenges students behavior in public schools even though the students are exercising their rights under the Constitution and as allowed by the "Department of Education's Guidelines for Religious Expression in Public Schools."

The Freedom from Religion Foundation typical actions:

- waged, and lost, a years-long battle to remove a World War II memorial statue of Jesus Christ.
- sued for the removal of football team chaplains from universities across the USA.
- sued to remove "In God We Trust" from US currency
- sued presidents over the National Day of Prayer
- tried to force an Oklahoma school to end its voluntary prayer program
- filed a suit to remove a prayer from a school board meeting's opening procedures
